City, county agree to purchase bucket truck

The 55-foot-long vehicle will be used jointly for tree maintenance

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

Earlier this week, the final touches were placed on a joint agreement by the city and county purchase a bucket truck.

"Wabash County and the City of Wabash agreed to make a joint purchase of a 2009 International 55-foot bucket truck for tree maintenance. All costs associated with the truck will be equally split between the two departments. I look forward to continuing to partner with the city on future investments that can be mutually beneficial," said Cole Wyatt, Wabash County Highway Department superintendent.

The agreement was signed by the Wabash City Board of Public Works, the Wabash City Council, Wabash County Board of Commissioners and the Wabash City Council.

"The city and the county both have an occasional need for the use of a bucket truck but cannot justify the expense of buying a new one for use by one political subdivision only, and (they) are aware that one may be available for a reasonable price at auction, and (they) wish to purchase an auction International Bucket Truck. ... (They) would share the use and maintenance," it stated.

The city and county attended to attend the J.J. Kane auction and bid on the truck, agreeing not spend more than $11,810. They will split the purchase price of the truck evenly, but the truck itself will be titled in the name of the city and kept at the Wabash City Street Department facility "except that, to the extent that the county needs the truck for consecutive days, the truck may be kept at the Wabash County Highway facility during the time the county will be using the truck."

"The city shall pay and maintain comprehensive and liability insurance on

Deliveries, food boxes 'a key' to allowing shelter-in-place

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

Hoosiers of all ages have been asked to shelter-in-place, but for those who rely on food banks and other organizations, that might mean missing a meal or several.

To fill this gap, local organizations have been bringing the food to them.

Beverly Ferry, CEO of Living Well in Wabash County, said Wabash County Public Transportation (WCT) has been "a key" to shelter in place throughout Wabash County.

Since March 26, 47 percent of the rides provided by Wabash County Public Transportation (WCT) has been delivery of pantry groceries from local pantries, including FISH and Community Cupboard, senior lunches and senior supplemental food boxes from Living Well in Wabash County, funded by Community Foundation of Wabash County, across the entire county.

"Rather than picking people up and taking them to food pantries in Wabash County, WCT picks up the food from the pantries and delivers to the person's residence. This has enabled people to shelter in place," said Ferry.

Ferry said WCT has provided

VFW to hold tenderloin dinner

Group beginning to hold events again after a hiatus due to COVID-19

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

The Wabash Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) Post 286 will hold its tenderloin dinner, with some restrictions, from 4 to 7 p.m. Friday, June 26 at 1078 W. Old 24, said Dan Ford.

The menu will include a hand-breaded tenderloin sandwich, baked beans and potato salad.

The event, which is open to the public, will cost $9 per dinner for either dine-in or carry-out.

Ford said Gov. Eric Holcomb's guidelines for the re-opening plan would be followed.

Last month's dinner was the VFW Post 286's first such event since the COVID-19 pandemic reached the state. On March 19, the post was closed due to COVID-19 concerns. The original re-opening date was set for April 1, but was moved back even further on March 26. Most recently, they held a fish fry on Friday, June 19.

more than 1,000 deliveries of groceries or senior meals.

“We continue to do so, which enables people of all ages to reduce their risk to the virus,” said Ferry. Other than having WCT deliver, our senior supplemental food program has not changed. It is a program for the poorest of seniors, without assets, and funded by the Community Foundation of Wabash County. For those without means, this additional box of basics has helped them avoid the need to leave their homes.”

Ferry said WCT has delivered around 4,000 frozen meals to seniors all over Wabash County.

Area Five Agency on Aging and Community Services provides meals for five days a week at Winchester Senior Center, but now they are frozen, and about half are delivered by WCT.

WCT delivers 27 meals, two per person, on Mondays and 54 meals, also two per person.

“Almost all of those are seniors who were not part of the senior lunch program before the pandemic while seniors while seniors who were regular attendees at the lunch site before the pandemic pick up their meals via curbside at Winchester Senior Center,” said Ferry.

Ferry said lunches before COVID-19 were around 20 seniors daily, Monday through Friday, which have continued with curbside pickup at the senior center.

“With delivery by WCT, we have more than doubled, and at times, tripled the number of seniors in the program,” said Ferry.

The Community Cupboard provided more than 130,000 pounds of food in the last three months, which WCT delivered to low-income households of all ages.

Ferry said in the first three months of the pandemic, Living Well’s pantry, Community Cupboard, provided more than 130,000 pounds, 65 tons, of fresh, frozen and canned groceries, delivered by WCT to almost 700 Wabash County households of all ages, totaling more than 2,000 people, with almost 300 seniors.

Ferry said they need volunteers and donations of food and money.

“There is something for almost everyone to do,” said Ferry. “Putting non-perishable foods in little free pantries across the community (helps.) There is one outside Winchester Senior Center. We combine monetary gifts to be able to purchase special items we could not otherwise afford to provide to each family. Households need items they cannot purchase with food stamps, such as personal care items – body wash, hand sanitizer, laundry detergent, hand soap, toothbrushes and toothpaste – and cleaning supplies – such as dish soap, toilet paper, paper towels and trash bags. Donations of these items are wonderful. Examples of the food purchased with monetary gifts are pancake syrup and pancake mix; basic cereal; and spaghetti sauce, frozen hamburger or sausage and pasta. We combine monetary gifts to be able to buy enough monthly featured items to give to each household. All of this is in addition to the tailgate events with Second Harvest of East Central Indiana.”

Good oral hygiene is important even in babies

Dear Doctor: Our daughter is only 4 years old, and she has had her first cavity already. What can we do to make sure that things go better at her next visit to the dentist, and for her new baby brother?

Elizabeth Ko & Eve Glazier
Ask the Doctors

Dear Reader: Tooth decay is common in young children. Their small mouths can make thorough brushing a challenge, and a wriggling and impatient child only adds to the level of difficulty. In fact, studies show that one-fourth of all children have had at least one cavity by the time they turn 4. Fortunately, with consistent dental hygiene, good diet and regular visits to the dentist, you can prevent tooth decay.

Our mouths can play host to hundreds of different types of bacteria, many of them benign, and some even useful. But among their number is a bacterium known as streptococcus mutans, a sugar-loving organism that is responsible for the formation of cavities. Every time we eat, this bacterium gets a meal as well. And as it devours the sugars that linger in our mouths, it produces an acidic byproduct that gradually erodes the tooth’s enamel coating. That’s why brushing and flossing, as well as a diet that limits sugar, are crucial to good dental health. Fortunately, with a few simple steps that you follow every day, you can significantly reduce your child’s risk of developing more cavities.

Even before an infant’s first tooth emerges, you should gently wipe their gums and mouth with a clean, damp cloth after feedings. Their first tooth should be greeted with a soft infant toothbrush that you use for a gentle cleansing after each meal. Brushing with plain water is fine. If you do decide to use toothpaste at this point, make sure it’s a tiny amount, about the size of a grain of rice. As soon as your child has two teeth that touch each other, it’s time to begin flossing.

Again, it’s important for you to be very gentle so as not to cause discomfort, pain or bleeding.

Children 3 and older should brush twice a day and continue flossing once a day. Young children are often not coordinated enough, or they lack the attention span, to do a thorough job. If that’s the case with your daughter, continue to brush her teeth for her until you’re sure she’s up to the task. Most kids need help brushing, or at least close supervision, until they’re 7 or 8.

Sugar increases the risk of developing cavities, so diet is also important. Limit sweets, sugary drinks and snacks between meals. And when kids do indulge, get them into the habit of brushing their teeth immediately afterward. All of this will be easier if you set a good example yourself. Be sure your kids see you brushing your teeth after meals, just as you’re asking them to. Ditto for daily flossing.

And don’t forget about the dentist, who will be an important lifelong ally in maintaining good oral health. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends that kids see a pediatric dentist within six months after their first tooth appears, or by 12 months of age.

Biblical prophets, veteran preachers and troubled streets

In times of turmoil, brutality, fire and rage, black preachers have always turned to the Old Testament prophets.

Hear Jeremiah addressing the king and his court: “Thus says the Lord: Act with justice and righteousness, and deliver from the hand of the oppressor anyone who has been robbed. And do no wrong or violence to the alien, the orphan and the widow, or shed innocent blood. ... (If) you will not heed these words, I swear by myself, says the Lord, that this house shall become a desolation.” There’s plenty more where that came from. No one is shocked when black pastors take biblical texts about sin, justice, repentance and mercy and weave them into images and headlines from the news, said the Rev. Terriel Byrd, urban ministry professor at Palm Beach

Atlantic University. This is a crucial role they have always played – within their communities, and as bridge-builders to others.

“Even when they know that what they’re going to say will be rejected, they dare to speak as prophets,” he said. “They aren’t afraid to preach what they need to preach. If you go to church during times like these, you know a black preacher will not be silent.”

After decades of studying the art of preaching – he is the former president of the African American Caucus of the Academy of Homiletics – Byrd knows that traditions are different in white sanctuaries. But he is convinced America needs to hear from all kinds of preachers after the killing of George Floyd, his neck under the knee of a white Minneapolis police officer.

On the streets, some white police are kneeling – this is powerful symbolism on many levels – with protestors in prayer. Unity across racial lines in churches will be just as important.

Black church leaders will be on the scene during peaceful protests. When it’s time to heal and clean up, all kinds of religious believers will take part – black, white, whatever. But will they be able to speak together?

“It’s crucial for white-church leaders to step forward and take a leadership role at this moment,” said Byrd, reached by telephone. “If we have some true partnerships form, with a real sense of honesty and equality, we could see a way forward and make real progress fighting this injustice.” This is not, of course, the first time that clergy have faced this challenge.

In the spring of 1992, I was part of a Denver Seminary team that led a seminar blending studies of the Old Testament prophets with efforts to respond – through preaching and religious education – to spiritual signals drawn from mainstream news and entertainment.

Half of the participants were white, and half were black.

Obviously, it was impossible to ignore the Los Angeles riots following the acquittal of four Los Angeles police officers who had been videotaped beating Rodney King after a lengthy high-speed chase. In five days, 55 people died, more than 2,000 were injured and 1,000 buildings were damaged or destroyed.

The seminary’s president – the late Rev. Haddon Robinson, a world-famous homiletics professor – approved a unique assignment during the riots. We asked each white student to contact a black pastor, seeking insights into the next Sunday sermon. Black students contacted white pastors with the same goal.

Every black pastor contacted by our students directly addressed the L.A. riots, and most quoted biblical prophets. The big idea: America needed to repent, because there was enough sin and brokenness in this storm of racism and violence to touch us all. Only one white preacher addressed the riots, if I remember correctly. Several said they couldn’t interrupt a planned sermon series.

Years later, Byrd and I discussed the sobering lessons learned in that seminar while we were teaching together at Palm Beach Atlantic.

The current crisis – reaching from coast to coast – demands a wider response. Silence is not an option, Byrd told me this week.

“Many white pastors seem afraid of being rebuked or being accused of causing division in their pews. I understand that they may not think they have as much freedom” as preachers in black churches, he said. “But, if white-church leaders say, ‘We will stand together against racism,’ that will matter right now. ... People know black preachers will say this. But who will join them?”

ASK THE EXPERT

Hearing Loss and Cognitive Decline

It begins when you need to turn up the television a little louder or ask friends to repeat themselves. Maybe you misunderstand someone on the phone or mistake one word for another when dining out with your friends.

For most people, that is enough to alert them that they should come in for a hearing screening and obtain a baseline hearing test.

For others, they feel like their hearing loss is everyone else's problem. We hear it all the time: "My wife will speak up, my kids know to email me now instead of call, if someone really wants to talk to me, they'll get my attention."

The truth is, however, that hearing loss is all about you. It's about your brain. You were born with two ears and you need them to work well in order to keep your brain healthy.

In a recent study, Hearing Loss and Cognitive Decline (Frank Lin, M.D., Ph.D. et al. 2013 JAMA Internal Medicine), Dr. Lin explained his findings:

- Over a 6-year period, individuals with hearing loss had cognitive abilities that declined 30-40% faster than those with normal hearing.
- Levels of declining brain function were directly related to the amount of hearing loss.
- On average, older adults with hearing loss developed significant impairments in their cognitive abilities 3.2 years sooner than those with normal hearing.

The truth is that your wife may not mind yelling, your friends may not mind repeating themselves... But you need to correct your hearing loss in order to keep your brain healthy.

And guess what? As you wear hearing devices and begin to hear better, to understand better, and to better engage with your friends and family, you strengthen your relationship with them.

The wife of one of our patients said it best: "When Bob got the hearing aids, going to dinner with him became a delight! An absolute delight! I felt like we were dating again."

Man’s unsure mental health clouds vision of the future

DEAR ABBY: I recently started dating again after ending a very difficult marriage. To say I am guarding my heart for fear of getting hurt would be an understatement.

I have met someone that I can see having a future with, but some things concern me. He has been hospitalized for mental health reasons in the past. He’s constantly saying, “I’m sorry I’m so screwed up” or remarking about being “crazy.” He mentions his depression almost daily, and he hates being, as he puts it, “messed up in the head.” He just can’t seem to move past his issues.

I feel like he doesn’t want to move forward and start living his life again. I have lived with depression for most of my life, but it doesn’t define who I am. If I don’t respond to his calls or messages right away, he gets hurt and assumes I’m mad at him.

My question is, am I being overly cautious based on not wanting to get hurt again, or should I take a step back? I would like to see a future with him, but I’m not sure he is ready to see any kind of a future with anyone. – Guarded Heart

DEAR GUARDED HEART: You are not being overly cautious. You are asking yourself intelligent, insightful questions about someone who appears not as far along on the path to mental wellness as you are. Is this man still being treated for his issues? If not, he should be encouraged to talk with a licensed mental health professional not only about his depression, but also his glaring lack of self-esteem.

From your description, I would have to say he needs a friend now more than a romance, so take plenty of time if you proceed in this relationship. If he makes progress, see where things lead. If not, then in light of your own history, it might be better for you to find someone who is stronger.

DEAR ABBY: I have been in a six-year relationship. About two years into it, I found out that “Wayne” was separated, but not divorced, from his wife of 20 years. The fact that they are separated is not the issue. They live together and do things as a married couple. The wife and I have met each other several times, and I have gone to his children’s graduation parties and family weddings.

He has told me every year that this is the year he will file for divorce, but it still hasn’t happened. I don’t know why he is holding on because I do not believe they are intimate. Their children are adults, so there is nothing keeping them together. He tells me he can’t live without me, but his actions have proven otherwise. Do you think they are in an open marriage? Is there any hope for our future together? – Wasting Time In Massachusetts

DEAR WASTING TIME: Not at the rate you are going. I suspect the reason Wayne hasn’t followed through and filed for divorce may be financial. He and his wife may also like things just the way they are because they can maintain their social life, he’s comfortable at home and he has you to sleep with, which may be a relief to her. You have my sympathy, but I think you have invested enough time. What’s going on is unfair to you. This romance was based on dishonesty on his part, and you deserve more than you have been getting.

The Gospel is the good news from God

Q: Why is the Gospel so controversial and why do some say everyone must decide what they think about it? — G.D.

A: The Bible says that it’s appointed that man will die once (Hebrews 9:27). All of nature’s in the process of dying. Yet most people are living as if they think that they will never die. Most people are living for today with barely a thought of eternity.

The Bible and nature both teach that everything that has a beginning also has an ending. The day begins with a sunrise; but the sun sets, the shadows gather, and that calendar day’s crossed out, never to appear again. We will never be able to repeat today. It’s gone forever.

Nations and civilizations rise, flourish for a time and then decay. Eventually, each comes to an end. This, because of sin, is the decree of history and the way of life on this planet.

The Bible also teaches that the world system as we know it shall come to a close. “The world is passing away... but he who does the will of God abides forever” (1 John 2:17).

This is why the Gospel is so important, it’s the Good News from God. But the Gospel also drives people to a decision — the most important decision ever made — and that is whether or not each individual will receive Christ as Savior or reject Him and remain in their sin.

The world’s days are numbered. Every cemetery testifies that the Bible is true. Life is only a vapor that appears for a moment and then vanishes, just as the grass that withers and the flowers fade. God has prepared a bright future and a plan for each person and His message is to repent of sin and turn to Him and live forever. Decide today.

ALMOST DOESN'T COUNT

In the game of golf, almost doesn't count. Neither does almost count when we speak of our relationship with God. This relationship needs to be personal, trusting, and fulfilling...not almost but total. Yes, we have a much better chance at winning at the game of life when we connect with the Source of all life's blessings. As we worship each week let us be totally persuaded to fill our lives with the will of our Heavenly Father.
